The University requires from each student that the tuition fee should be paid by the bank transfer and any charges required by the bank for this transfer should be covered from the student's side (payers), so that the University will receive the mentioned amount in netto.

Without any exception, all newcomming 1st year students are to pay the tuition fee in a full amount.

It is not possible to pay it in instalments.

Please check all bank details and the transferred amount carefully before you proceed the bank transfer. Do not forget to identify the tuition fee payment (name of student, year of study, date of birth...). Sending the money to the incorrect bank account or using another currency may cause a tuition fee debit because of a payment delay and additional high bank transfer fees.

The tuition fee covers all instruction (lectures, seminars, lab work, clinical training and tutorials); certain necessary texts such as laboratory manuals etc., and entitle students to use all faculty facilities including the library and a modern computer lab.

If the student leaves their studies during the academic year, they have no right to a refund of the fee, not even of a proportional part.

The student suspended from their studies in the course of an Academic year will not receive a refund of the fee from the faculty.

The fee does not cover accommodation and meals and other living and administrative expenses.
